

Dr. Johnny Wu is a visionary leader and advocates for transformational change in the field of Correctional (Carceral) Medicine. With a deep interest in technology, commitment to social justice, and a wealth of expertise in healthcare, he is poised to revolutionize the way we approach healthcare within correctional systems in this post-COVID environment.

With a background as a seasoned medical professional specializing in both Internal Medicine and Correctional (Carceral) Medicine, Dr. Wu possesses a comprehensive understanding of the unique healthcare challenges faced by incarcerated individuals reinforced firsthand through his active role as a NCCHC physician surveyor with over a decade auditing many large jails and prison systems across the nation. With over twenty years of firsthand direct patient experience, he has witnessed the immense impact that quality healthcare can have on the lives of those within correctional facilities as well as the community at large.

As a current ACCP board member, he envisions a future where correctional facilities become models of compassionate and effective healthcare delivery where care is holistic and patient-centered. He is dedicated to implementing evidence-based practices that prioritize the physical and mental well-being of inmate patients, while also addressing the complex underlying issues that contribute to their involvement in the criminal justice system.

The recent ACGME recognition of Correctional (Carceral) Medicine as an accredited medical specialty for training is in part due to Dr. Wu's participation in its advisory board. Dr. Wu currently is a clinical associate professor at NSU KPCOM and held prior academic appointments at UCONN and Rutgers University. He has been expanding the awareness of the need for incarcerated individuals to be treated with dignity and quality care that all in the community deserve with educating future primary care providers.

As a recent recipient of the Armond Start Award of Excellence, Dr. Wu firmly believes that healthcare within correctional systems should not only focus on treating illnesses but also on promoting rehabilitation, reducing recidivism, and facilitating successful reintegration into society. He is committed to investing in preventative care, mental health services, and substance abuse treatment programs with MOUD, recognizing the transformative potential of these initiatives in breaking the cycle of incarceration.

In his role as the Centurion Chief Clinical Officer, he is well poised to mobilize interdisciplinary teams of medical professionals, correctional clients, mental health experts, and policymakers to develop comprehensive strategies that address the systemic challenges faced by the correctional healthcare system. By fostering collaboration and dialogue, he aims to create an environment that nurtures innovation, research, and the implementation of best practices.

With an unwavering commitment to equitable healthcare access, Dr. Johnny Wu is determined to eliminate disparities in healthcare provision within correctional settings, ensuring that every individual, regardless of their circumstances, receives dignified and high-quality medical care.

Through his transformative leadership, Dr. Johnny Wu aspires to reshape the landscape of correctional medicine, setting new standards that inspire various Departments of Correction to prioritize the health and well-being of incarcerated individuals. His vision and dedication hold the promise of creating a more just and compassionate society for all.
